Analysis & Blueprint

SCENARIO SUMMARY

Student Ambassador Tour Training: At the start of each school year, new ambassadors must learn how to give campus tours in an effective and accurate manner. This module will go over how this learning will take place and what ambassadors will be expected to learn and do. This training takes place yearly for each group of new ambassadors and adjustments can be made between each year. This will take into account feedback from the ambassador team to improve the program year over year.

SCENARIO OVERVIEW

TITLE

Student Ambassador Tour Training

ORGANIZATIONAL CONTEXT

The University as a whole has a vested interest in perpetuating a positive experience for those visiting campus.

DESIRED FUTURE STATE

New ambassadors are able to give accurately informational tours and present a positive experience to tour guests on campus

TARGET AUDIENCE

New and returning student ambassadors ranging from college freshmen to college seniors. Varying educational, social, and economic backgrounds.

LEARNING NEED

Ambassadors are required to give tours on campus and will need to know what information to share and how to best handle tour groups

LEARNING GOAL

Ambassadors will learn how to give campus tours and what information to share

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

LEARN THE TOUR SCRIPT

Proper knowledge of the tour script includes knowing the names of buildings, what programs are housed in each building, events that may be related to different spaces, and facts about each of these areas. The script should not be memorized to be given by rote, but be known enough to be given personally to each tour group.

LEARN HOW TO EXPRESS TOUR INFORMATION

Storytelling is, arguably, the most important aspect of a tour. A person may not remember what year a building was built, but they are more likely to remember an ambassador's personal experience with an activity on campus in that space. Being able to express facts and stories to an audience effectively is a key part of giving a tour

LEARN THE TOUR ROUTE

Knowledge of the tour route includes knowing the typical tour route and where each building, program, and important area to highlight are located. Additionally, this includes knowing how to be flexible with the route or what areas may be adjusted or personalized for a tour group's specific needs.

LEARN HOW TO LEAD A TOUR GROUP

Tour groups can vary widely in composition, from a prospective student and their family to a VIP individual, to a group of second grade students. Ambassadors will learn how to lead these groups and alter the tour route, script, and overall message to best serve each group's needs.

ADULT LEARNER ANALYSIS

WHO ARE THE LEARNERS?

Student ambassadors who are hired as part of the ambassador program.

INDIVIDUAL DIFFERENCES

Learners have varied genders, political affiliations, religions, socio-economic backgrounds and races. These differences create a varied learner group.

SITUATIONAL DIFFERENCES

Learners will come from different backgrounds. New ambassadors are often recent high school graduates, but some come into the program a little later and have more life experience. All come from slightly different situations and have different outlooks.

PERSONALITY DIFFERENCES

Ambassadors typically are considered high-achieving students prior to joining the program. Personality types vary to create a group with a wide variety of connection opportunities.

PRIOR KNOWLEDGE

New ambassadors to the program are typically new freshmen coming from high school or a gap year. They have varying knowledge of campus and local areas.

GATHERING INPUT

Much information about the ambassadors is collected during the hiring process. At the beginning of the training they will be given a self-reflection quiz to further identify their knowledge basis and where to focus their learning.

ADULT LEARNER PROFILES

These profiles are a summary of three types of learners in the program. All have their strengths and specific areas where they excel. Additionally, they all have areas where they may need more support. Some learners may fall outside of these three categories, but commonly will share traits with one or more of these three.

THE NATURAL STORYTELLER

This learner is confident in their ability to talk in front of a group. They connect easily with others and keeps things engaging. They want to make connections. They may need more support with remembering key facts and keeping information accurate.

THE DETAIL-ORIENTED BALANCER

Fact and information focused. Wants to have every detail down before moving on to action. Typically balancing many different activities. They may need more support with speaking naturally and sharing stories over reciting memorized information.

THE QUIET OBSERVER

Thoughtful and reflective, these learners absorb information before wanting to share it. They are empathetic and connect with people on a deeper level. They may need more positive support with gaining confidence giving tours and sharing information.

ANDROGY
PRINCIPLES

PRINCIPLE	STATUS	EVIDENCE	POTENTIAL RISK	DESIGN RESPONSE	INNOVATION OPPORTUNITY
Need to Know	Strong	Ambassadors are required to learn the material for the program	Lack of understanding of the importance of tours for the University system	Keep the focus central. Hilight the importance of the ambassador tour role at each stage.	Incorporate personal stories and testimonials from individuals to showcase tour imacts
Self Concept	Vulnerable	Learners may feel overwhelmed by the amount of information and feel inadaquate	Previously high performing students may feel like they are not meeting personal standards	Use suportive systems and multiple check-in points	Utilize returning ambassadors and assign ambassador mentors for specific help
Prior Experience	Mixed	Learners may feel they must “fit a mold” rater than bring in their own experience	Learners may feel they must memorize the tour script and deliver it by rote	Personal stories and experiences should be hilighted and viewed as strengths	Practice good storytelling. Utilize gamification to encourage learners to present experiences in a positive way
Readiness to Learn	Mixed	Learners may feel overwhelmed by too much information too quickly	Learners may struggle if information is presented too quickly	Information should be given in steps. The tour script given early to encourage early learning	Present information and review information in a gamified manner. Allow learners to set their own pace
Orientation to Learning	Mixed	Learners may feel unprepared	Leaners may be apprehensive about giving tours or about training	Utilize activities with real connotations such as real scenarios or situations	Use role-play scenarios and discussion to go over various scenarios and real situations
Motivation to Learn	Mixed	If learners do not feel confidnet they may lose motivation	Learners may absorb information at different rates	Allow learners opportunities to personalize their learning and practice	Utilize experienced ambassadors as mentors for new learners for support

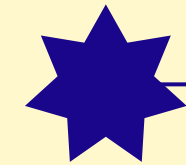

ADULT LEARNING PROCESS MODEL

LEARNER PROFILE	NEED	CREATE	IMPLEMENT	EVALUATE
Natural Storyteller	• Strength in engagement • Needs support in accuracy	• Storytelling prompts • Fact sheets • Route practice	• Role-play situations • Gamified fact review • Mentor feedback	Practical tour scored for accuracy, engagement, and audience connection.
Detail-Oriented Balancer	• Strength in facts • Needs support with natural delivery	• Scripts • Checklists • Story-building activities	• Guided practice • Mock tours • Mentor modeling	Written test and live tour focused on accuracy and flexibility.
Quiet Observer	• Strength in reflection • Needs support with confidence	• Low-pressure practice • Reflection • Mentor support	• Small group practice • Scaffolded role-play • Check-ins	Self-reflection, mentor feedback, and final practical tour assessment.

TIMELINE

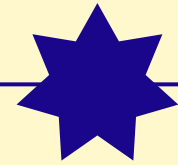

Learners will be given multiple opportunities to give feedback. There will be an initial self-reflection quiz to establish a knowledge and personality baseline. Midway through the training will be a knowledge check in. There will be a formal test at the end of the training. Following the training there will be an opportunity for learners to give feedback about the training process.

ONE MONTH PRIOR TO TRAINING

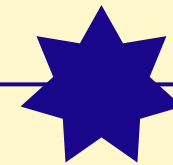

Tour script, route, and guidelines are sent to learners to them to review and study at their own pace.

WEEK 1

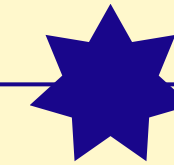

Formalized group training will take place. Learning will include a self-reflection quiz, formal lecture style learning, and gamified learning and reviews including roleplaying scenarios and competitions.

WEEK 2

Further training in gamefied fashions will take place. Self paced reviews and practice is encouraged. Check ins with mentors, tour lead, and tour manager will take place.

WEEK 3

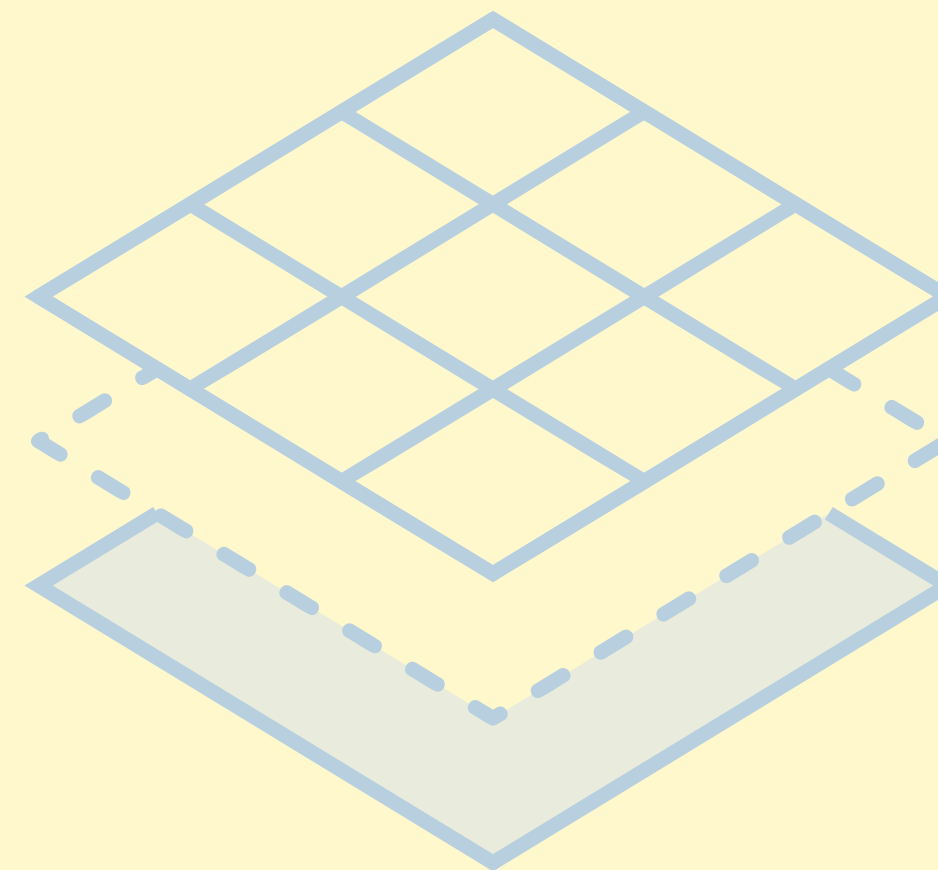

The final test will take place. Learners will take a written exam and a practical portion where they will give a tour using a created scenario. Learners will be given feedback on their performance.

BLUEPRINT SUMMARY

This learning experience will intentionally move learners through the learning process while allowing them to choose how they may best learn and what they want to focus on. Specific information will be given with purposeful intent, and skills will be built with support and guidance. The blueprint will create an environment where learners are supported by adult learning principles, leading to a learner-centric experience. Learning will be presented in real-world context to further support learning.

PERSONAL USE SUMMARY AND TESTIMONIAL

This is a training outline that I am currently working on building for actual use this fall. This process has helped me to build out the training in a way that utilizes Adult Learning Principles and builds a learning environment better suited to serve the purpose of the training. I am looking forward to utilizing these principles in practice and assisting this years ambassadors to learn these processes and to give great tours this year.
